

University of Miami School of Communication

Coral Gables, Florida

Client:
University of Miami

Total Cost:
$9,500,000

Nature of Work:

This project consisted of the expansion and renovations for the nationally recognized School of Communication at the University of Miami's Main Campus in Coral Gables.

Initially developed in preliminary designs as an "addition" to the cable television studio, the expanded program currently encompasses approximately 44,000 SF in a 3 and 4 story structure that will envelop the existing 1960's vintage cable television building.

Provisions are included for new administrative offices, 40 faculty offices, 8-16mm flatbed studios, 1 animation studio, 2 sound mix theaters, one motion picture/broadcasting stage, two story set storage facilities, 2 writing labs, 2 graphics labs, 5 classrooms, a print journalism bureau, student reading/computing/viewing rooms, a photo lab, a library and a student commons area. The new facility will consolidate the school's five programs under one roof and allow the school to relinquish current space allocated elsewhere in the campus, some in World War II vintage wooden structures.
